

Eleven Things You Can Do To Raise A Drug Addicted Child

1. Be Their lawyer. Defend them to the end no matter what.
2. Be their banker. Give them what they want even if you can't afford it. The child learns they never need to worry about money.
3. Be their insurance company. Any time they make a mistake, be there prepared to cushion the shock. Accept responsibility for what they do.
4. Be their agent. Don't let them have to earn things. If the child makes the team but doesn't make the starting lineup and hasn't played in two games, go down to the coach and say that my child needs to play. Intercede for the child. They learn someone else will take care of it.
5. Be their mechanic. Fix anything that goes wrong in their life, so they never have to worry about getting themselves out of any jam they may get into. When they become adults they will still need you to fix things for them.
6. Be their administrative assistant. Keep up with their schedules-make sure they get where they need to be on time and take messages for them.. After all – they are going to be presidents of corporations one day and they need to know how to manage an administrative assistant. Why not let them practice on you.
7. Be their butler. Everybody needs a clean room and house and meals whenever they want them. Face it-they are going to be rich adults one day and will need to know how to manage a butler. What is learned is irresponsibility-that they don't need to do things for themselves.
8. Be their apologist. Apologize for their mistakes. When they do something embarrassing why not internalize it and make excuses for them. Again – the child learns they don't have to be accountable for their behavior.
9. Be their emotional doormat. Let them dump all their emotional baggage on you. Let them step on you and take control of your house.
10. Be their fairy godparent. Pull out the magic wand and make everything okay. If they run out of money, pull out your magic wand and manufacture some. If they wreck the car-fix it. The child never learns they have to be responsible for their actions and that there are things they have to do.
11. Don't share your belief system with your child. Because if they don't have a belief system, they don't know what the parameters are and don't know what behaviors are acceptable. You can't leave beliefs about drugs to a child. Children need a belief system.

system, they don't know what the parameters are and don't know what behaviors are acceptable. You can't leave beliefs about drugs to a child. Children need a belief system.